Mr. Richard Burrer

*We have become a generation of unrest:
afraid to trust in the words of a world that speaks of love,
yet lives in hatred
daring to question the values of another age willing to work to build a dream—but not knowing how to begin.
So we have turned to those who called themselves "educators"
and we cried "Teach us!"
They have accepted our challenge.*

In becoming aware of ourselves we have struggled with the doubts and fears of discovery. As we have searched, they have given of their trust and respect, they have shared their wisdom, and they have led us to question. In our questioning we have often fallen, but with their experience they have helped us up. They have shown us how to learn from our failure so that we may teach others. They have helped us to grow and to realize the potential our freedom holds.
