SUPERINTENDENTS

As a professional educator, the Superintendent of the North Haven school system supervises the operation of the total school system. With aid from the Assistant Superintendents, he interprets and implements the educational policy of the Board of Education. The Superintendent's position thus enables him to meet with people on all levels of the North Haven educational system, and to oversee the operation of the system as a whole.

Since the Superintendent is the executive agent of the Board of Education, he is directly concerned with many administrative as well as educational questions. In addition to advising the Board in its policy-making, and developing the rules and regulations necessary to implement the Board's policies, the Superintendent works closely with members of the Board in preparing an annual educational budget. He also recommends to the Board certified staff members for promotion, as well as prospective teachers for appointment. Each year, he makes a report to the Board on the state of the North Haven school system.

In view of the extensive responsibilities of the Superintendent, we have been indeed fortunate to pursue our education under the direction of Dr. Charles Ritch for the past six years.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Relevant study is necessary for the development of a free, responsible individual. Aware of this, North Haven is seeking a new dimension in education, one that incorporates diversity of subject matter, significance to the society and development of the personality as a whole.

The Board of Education has a great deal more say in the pursuit of relevant education than most students might realize. Giving freely of their time and energy, members of the Board concern themselves with all phases of education in North Haven, from kindergarten up through the high school level.

As part of their responsibility for formulating school policy, the Board deals with special topics relating to education. All plans are reviewed by the Board, from new courses to a totally new schedule for the high school. It is largely through the foresight and determination of the Board that the modular schedule was introduced into North Haven. After hearing about other schools with modular scheduling and studying the proposals for a modular schedule in North Haven, the Board decided to institute the program, the first in the area.

Another function of the Board of Education is a constant re-evaluation of all phases of education, from courses to teaching methods and the role of the school in the community. In keeping tabs on what's happening in the North Haven schools, the Board of Education can more adequately provide for the needs of the student.

Mr. Thomas P. Ryan, Assistant Superintendent; Dr. Charles F. Ritch, Superintendent; Mr. William G. England, Assistant Superintendent.

DR. DELIO ROTONDO

To become an individual secure in one's own individuality, one must first achieve self-respect. The value a man places on every action is determined by the value he places on himself, and this, in turn, determines his attitude toward others. Though self-respect cannot be taught, it thrives in an atmosphere which assumes its existence. The atmosphere at North Haven has left us free individuals able to develop into people, after first making us think about ourselves as individuals and as part of the society.

Perhaps this atmosphere is the greatest accomplishment of the high school. The teachers' enthusiasm and dedication deserve great credit and our thanks for this achievement, but it could not have come about without the ideas and spirit generated by Dr. Delio Rotondo. With imagination, wit, firmness and open-mindedness he has shown us the value of an individual and has begun the task of helping us to find our own balance of freedom and responsibility. Now he is leaving the high school to become superintendent of schools in North Haven, and he will be deeply missed. We are grateful to him and glad that he will remain close by.

GUIDANCE

The philosophy of the Guidance department is three-fold: 1) to help students provide for their future, whether it is in vocational or educational planning, 2) to help students with school-related problems, and 3) to maintain the permanent records of each student. Underlying this philosophy is the resolve not to make decisions for the student, but rather help the student to make his own decisions about his future. It is the job of the Guidance department to acquaint the student with all the alternatives to any decision.

Through group discussions, college conferences and informational services, the department keeps juniors and seniors abreast of the latest information on college admissions. There are also weekly orientation sessions for ninth graders, to help them adjust to the independent study program.

The department feels that it must innovate in order to keep up with changes in education. The department constantly evaluates its work, and seniors are frequently asked in to give their opinions. The entire process enables the Guidance department to reflect the needs of students.

ART

In an effort to appeal to a wider range of students, the Art department instituted a new program last year in the West Campus. The intent is to appeal to the student interested in interior design, math, and engineering. Students create their art works by beginning with materials and working outward to ideas, rather than arbitrarily imposing ideas on materials. The result has been a better understanding of the aesthetic properties of various materials worked with. A purer form of creation is thereby possible.

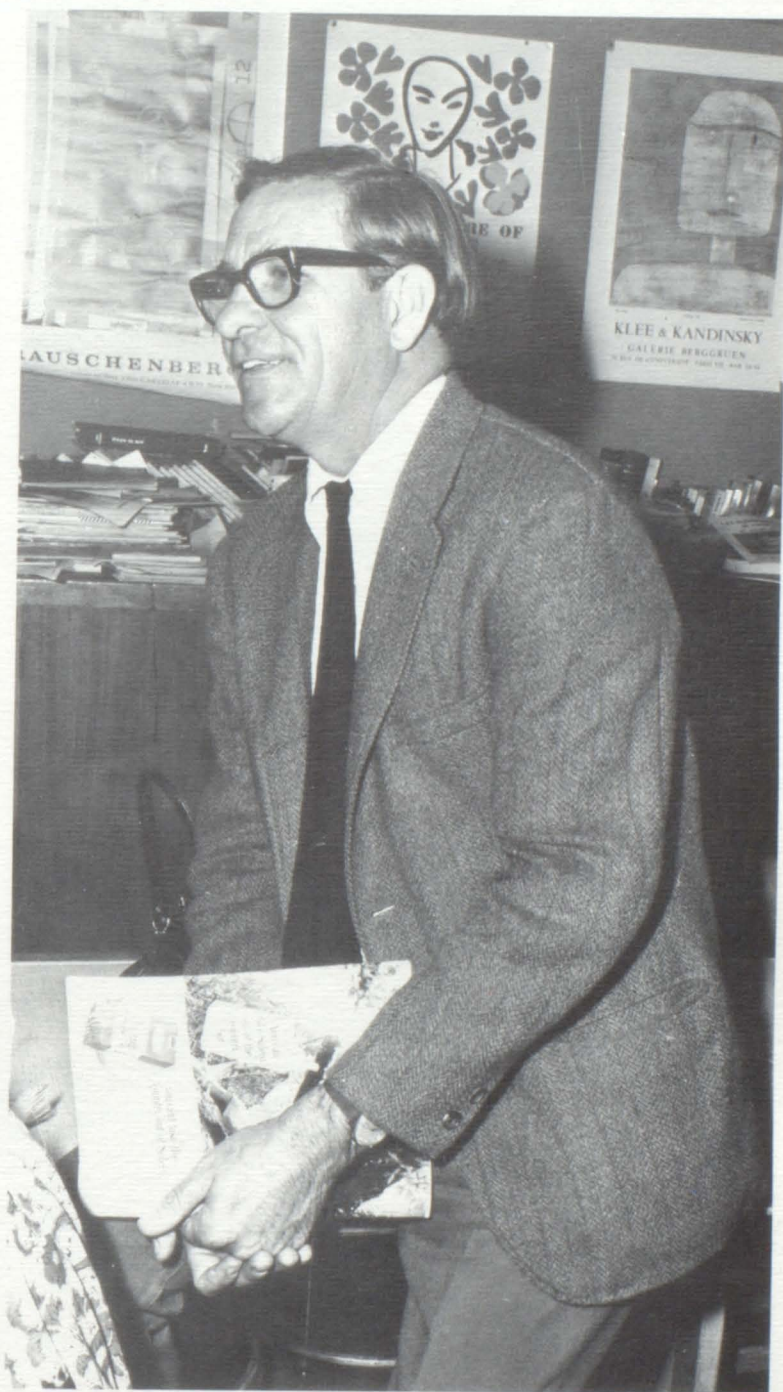

The Art department has also worked closely with the Industrial Arts department to provide the sets for several dramatic productions at North Haven High School in the past few years. This close cooperation will continue with the formation of an advanced class based on the program at the West Campus. From these new concepts comes a fresh approach to art that brings the department a little closer to the art of the '60's.

BUSINESS

Preparing students for the working world has led the Business department to become one of the best in Connecticut. New equipment and new course ideas prepare students to be better consumers, and also help students who may not be majoring in business by providing courses which they will use after graduation.

A wireless-stenography lab has been introduced, whereby students may study from tapes contained in a master console. Eighty-eight channels are available for students to study from.

Another innovation is a full-year notehand course (most schools offer a half-year course), in which study skills are learned which will help students in higher education. Since there are no "tracks" in the Business department, students may take college level courses, and learn skills which they will use in college.

As a result of the foresight of the department in providing relevant courses, area businesses employ NHHS business graduates to such an extent that there are more job offers than there are people to fill them.

Students perfect secretarial skills through constant practice.

ENGLISH

The diverse interests of the teachers in the English department make possible the formation of a varied curriculum. North Haven has capitalized on this potential in its creation of the senior elective system, which includes, among others, American Literature, Drama, Cultural History, Religion, World Literature, Literature and POD and Contemporary Experiences. A major benefit of the elective system is that it allows concentrated study in one phase of English.

In order to give more meaning to a student's study in a particular elective, the faculty in the department has consciously sought to make the senior electives in English applicable to the study of English as a whole. Such an integration has been a major goal of the department.
